Miami Dade College's School of Architecture has obtained a nearly $10 million grant to train workers in manufactured construction.

The grant from the U.S. Department of Labor comes as construction employment is rebounding and some builders have found on-site contractors in short supply. This new program will provide certification programs tied to existing manufacturing technology and construction management programs.

"We are excited to be able to establish the certification program for manufactured construction," MDC President Dr. Eduardo J. Padrón said in a news release. "This grant will greatly help our efforts to assist our students in getting the skills they need for jobs in an in-demand industry, and, in turn, will help the industry and Florida's economy."
