

At Miami-Dade College, Biden pushes Obama's higher education plan

By Patricia Mazzei
The Miami Herald

SEPTEMBER 2, 2015, 6:14 PM

Joe Biden came to Miami on Wednesday and sounded — at times — like a politician with another campaign in him.

Speaking at Miami Dade College's North Campus about making higher education more affordable, the vice president touched on the sort of themes — immigration reform, the economy and the middle class — that presidential candidates like to deploy from the stump.

"People who aren't willing to risk failure never succeed," Biden said. At the end of the event, when a couple of reporters yelled questions about his plans, Biden didn't respond. An unidentified man in the audience, though, let his own feelings known: "Run, Joe!"

Biden spoke more than half an hour about the importance of community colleges in educating young people for good-paying careers and touted the Obama administration's proposal to pay for students' first two years of community college.

Read the complete report at The Miami Herald.

Copyright © 2015, Sun Sentinel