SECTION 4: HEPATITIS

Introduction: Health care professionals are at risk of exposure to blood and body fluids contaminated with the viruses that cause HIV and Hepatitis. Consistent use of Standard Precautions is the best known means to avoid transmission of these viruses or other contaminants. Students will be taught Standard Precautions before they provide care to any patient in the clinical setting. Although it is rare, a health care worker may become exposed to one of these viruses through accidental transmission. Currently, there is no vaccine that protects against the HIV virus. However, the Hepatitis B vaccine is an effective means of preventing Hepatitis B. As a student who will be providing direct patient care, you should discuss this vaccine with your health care provider.

About the Vaccine: The Hepatitis B Vaccine is a genetically engineered "yeast" derived vaccine. It is administered in the deltoid muscle (arm) in a series of three doses over a six month period. You should seek additional information about the vaccine from your health care provider; especially if you have an allergy to yeast or may be pregnant, or are a nursing mother.
